There are thousands of un-filled registered nurse positions in Florida right now, and local colleges are racing to train people for those jobs. The Florida Center for Nursing estimates that over 12,000 RN positions are available, with nearly 10,000 additional RN positions to be created in 2016, according to a 2015 survey of Florida hospitals [2].

Local colleges in the Tampa Bay Area are upgrading their training facilities to help fill those positions, and make sure their students are able to stay competitive in the job force.

To that end, the Hillsborough Community College [3] in Tampa has just created a "Simulation Suite."
