Media Statement: Fall of Ground Incident at Red Chris Mine

7/23/2025

On the morning of July 22, two fall of ground incidents occurred in the access way to the underground work area of a non-producing project at the Red Chris Mine in British Columbia, Canada.

At the time of the initial incident, three business partner employees were working more than 500 meters beyond the affected zone and were asked to relocate to a designated refuge station before a subsequent fall of ground blocked the access way. Following the first event, contact was established with the individuals and confirmation was received that they had safely relocated to one of multiple self contained refuge bays. The refuge stations are equipped with adequate food, water and ventilation to support an extended stay.

The second fall of ground event subsequently restricted communication. To ensure focus on the response efforts, a standdown of operations at Red Chris has been implemented. With the support of industry, we are working to assemble specialist teams from nearby mine sites to respond to the situation.

All appropriate emergency response protocols were activated immediately. Newmont is actively assessing all methods and technologies available to restore communication and safely bring our team members to surface. Our priority remains on ensuring the safety of the three individuals and of the emergency response teams supporting this effort.

Further updates will be provided as more information becomes available.
