Introduction:

Several things make it clear that the Plantronics Voyager Legend UC is a premium Bluetooth headset aimed at business professionals ^[3] and the most demanding of users. First of all, the device is designed like a high-grade precision instrument, thus giving its wearer a prominent “I am so important” look. Then there's the rich feature set, which includes convenient voice commands and multiple microphones for enhanced audio experience. It goes without saying that we have high hopes for this top-of-the-line product, so let's give it the review treatment and see what it has to impress us with!

Upon opening the headset's retail box we're delighted to see that it comes with a broad variety of accessories, which are added to further justify the $200 price tag of the Plantronics Voyager Legend UC. There's also a non-UC variant of the headset, priced at a much more reasonable $100 yet missing some of the extras listed below, such as the Bluetooth USB adapter, the carrying case and the charging dock.

Design and comfort:

We've tested quite a few Bluetooth headsets over the years, and the Plantronics Voyager Legend UC ranks above the average on the comfort scale. The unit itself may be bigger than your garden variety headset, but it is well balanced and it attaches firmly to your ear so it is very unlikely to fall off during every-day use. Besides, its design allows it to be worn on either ear. However, although we're fine with wearing the device even for prolonged periods of time, at 18 grams, it isn't light enough for one to completely ignore its presence.

It is nice to see that Plantronics has applied P2i liquid-repelling nanocoating to its accessory in order to prevent liquids (read: sweat) from damaging it. What isn't so great, however, is how dirty the soft-touch rubber body of the device gets over time, but that's a minor issue since that part remains hidden behind the wearer's ear during use.

The Plantronics Voyager Legend UC ranks above the average on the comfort scale

A total of four physical buttons are present on the Voyager Legend UC, two of which are located on the boom of the microphone. One is used for picking up/ending voice calls while the other activates voice commands. Both buttons are well positioned and easy [3] to reach. Two switches reside on the back of the unit – one for turning it on and off while the other is used for volume control. Once again, they are well exposed and provide great tactile feedback.
