

ECS Awarded $190M AI/ML Contract from DEVCOM Army Research Lab

3/5/2024

Company expands its AI/ML support for the Department of Defense

FAIRFAX, Va.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- ECS, a leader in advanced technology, science, and engineering solutions and an ASGN (NYSE: ASGN) brand, received a three-year, $190 million contract from the United States Army Combat Capabilities Development Command (DEVCOM) Army Research Lab (ARL). As prime contractor, ECS will serve as a system integrator for DEVCOM ARL, delivering and integrating artificial intelligence (AI) capabilities for Department of Defense (DoD) services and combatant commands.

The contract, awarded in Q3 of 2023, is a new initiative helping aid DoD objectives through the expansion and extension of key AI research. ECS will help develop, experiment with, and demonstrate advanced capabilities that provide new AI mobility and AI agility, at theater/field-level, across multiple critical DoD programs and domains.

"ECS has a long history of providing mission solutions to the DoD including cloud, cyber, data, and AI solutions," said Marshall Thames, senior vice president of mission solutions at ECS. "We're honored to support such a critical mission: developing and deploying next-gen AI capabilities along with our network of empowered teammates representing the best AI talent in the world."

"As the DoD looks to increase its AI capabilities, they face a technically challenging problem set," said John Heneghan, president of ECS. "As one of the largest providers of AI solutions to the DoD, ECS will lean on our broad AI expertise to help the DoD meet its automation objectives: increasing the safety, readiness, and decision dominance of our nation's warfighter."
